Aqualyx was developed by Professor Motolese, a well-known surgeon. Since its introduction in 2009, more than 2 million bottles of lipolysis have been used for patient treatment in 49 countries around the world. According to experts, Aqualyx's solution contains plant polymers that bind to the cell walls of adipose tissue before dissolving fat. Aqualyx injection can liquefy fat cells, and after 48 hours of chemical action, it can be excreted naturally with urine.

Process For Administering Aqualyx – How It Works

Individuals who long for a flawless silhouette can undergo lipotherapy or lipolysis (administration of Aqualyx) to achieve their perfectly contoured body shape. The term used to describe this procedure is known as Aqualysis or Aquaplasty. This process requires the use of special intralipotherapy needles (24G x 10cm not included), which once injected, liquify fat cells, permanently destroying them before releasing the fats into the lymphatic system.

An ultrasound device can be used to monitor the movement of Aqualyx into localized fat cells.

The whole process should take no more than an hour.

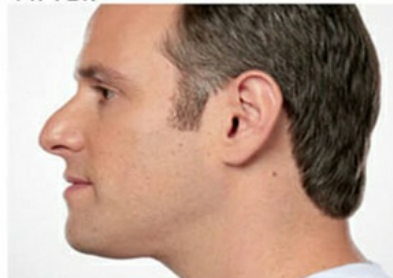

Although 2-8 treatments may be required, results are noticeable just after the first or second session. Treatments should be spaced out 4 weeks apart. More stubborn areas such as the hips and thighs may require more treatments than the chin and neck which can be treated in 1-3 sessions.

BEFORE

How is treatment carried out?

Only medical professionals that have received specialist training in administering Aqualyx, should treat patients with this product. Injections are usually repeated every 3 – 4 weeks and typically 2 injections at each spot during each treatment. Anaesthetics and flexible cannulas are used to aid the injection process.
