What is this product made of?

The following is the composition of Aqualyx injections:

Polymer of 3,6-Anhydro-L-Galactose and D-Galactose (0.5%), buffer systems (4.2%), sodium salt, 3,12-dihydroxy-5-cholan-24-acid (7.5%), water for injection purposes (87%), and sodium chloride (0.8%).
12α-dihydroxy-5β-24-oico cholanic acid sodium salt alters the fat cell membranes.

What can I use it for?

Aqualyxis a multipurpose solution that helps to reduce or emulsify the accumulated fat from various stubborn areas. These areas are often very difficult to trim or tone despite intense exercise or dieting. Aqualyx has shown amazing results for conditions like pseudogynecomastia in men. It is a revolutionary solution to reduce stubborn fat from body parts. Thus, it is used as a non-invasive alternative to liposuction.
What areas should I use this product on?
Aqualyx injections are highly recommended for the following areas:

Back
Hips
Thighs
Chin
Stomach
Pseudogynecomastia in males
Knees
Underneath the buttocks (saddlebags)

How long do the results last?

Ideally, if one can assure no weight gain post these injections, the results can stay life-long. Once the free fatty acids are emulsified and drained through the lymphatic system, they rarely re-appear. However, results vary between individuals depending on their health, lifestyle, and regime.
What is Aqualyx? Aqualyx is an injectable treatment designed to dissolve localized fat deposits. It contains a compound that targets and breaks down fat cells, offering a non-surgical alternative to liposuction.

What is Aqualyx?

Aqualyx is an injectable treatment that dissolves small pockets of excess fat under the skin. Sometimes called Aqualysis, Aquaplasty, or intralipotherapy, it's not yet approved by the U.S. Food & Drug Administration (FDA) but has been popular in Europe since launching in Italy in 2009. There, it's also known as Motolese Solution, after the doctor who developed it.

This noninvasive procedure is primarily performed to treat a double chin. It can also be used to treat fatty deposits along the jawline and on the knees, elbows, upper arms, muffin top, and other small areas.

Using a synthetic form of deoxycholate, a digestive bile naturally made by the liver, the fat-dissolving injections of Aqualyx "liquefy fat cells, destroying them for good," explains London plastic surgeon Dr. Yannis Alexandrides.

The solution breaks down the cell membrane, releasing its fatty acids. "The fat is then eliminated naturally, through the lymphatic system," says Dr. Alexandrides. Results typically take six weeks to appear.

Its cholanic acid-based formula is very similar to the deoxycholic acid in Kybella, the only fat-dissolving injectable currently approved by the FDA to treat the submental fat that creates a double chin.

In fact, doctors on RealSelf say that the main difference between Aqualyx and Kybella is that the latter has been more extensively studied and is approved for use in the U.S.
