Product Description

Wrinkle Botulinum Toxin 100iu 150iu thin face Innotox hutox Nabota Botulax Botox Allergan

Allergan Botox is nothing but a bacterial derivation of C.botulinum. These bacteria are found in natural habitats such as the soil, the forest, the lake and the mammalian intestinal tracts.

Since C.botulinum bacteria are naturally obtained, they are normally harmless. In the clinical sense, this makes them a better choice.

Botox was the first botulinum neurotoxin to be approved by the FDA for cosmetic purposes, but there are other brands. These "Botox-type" injections include:

Daxxify
Dysport
Jeuveau
Xeomin

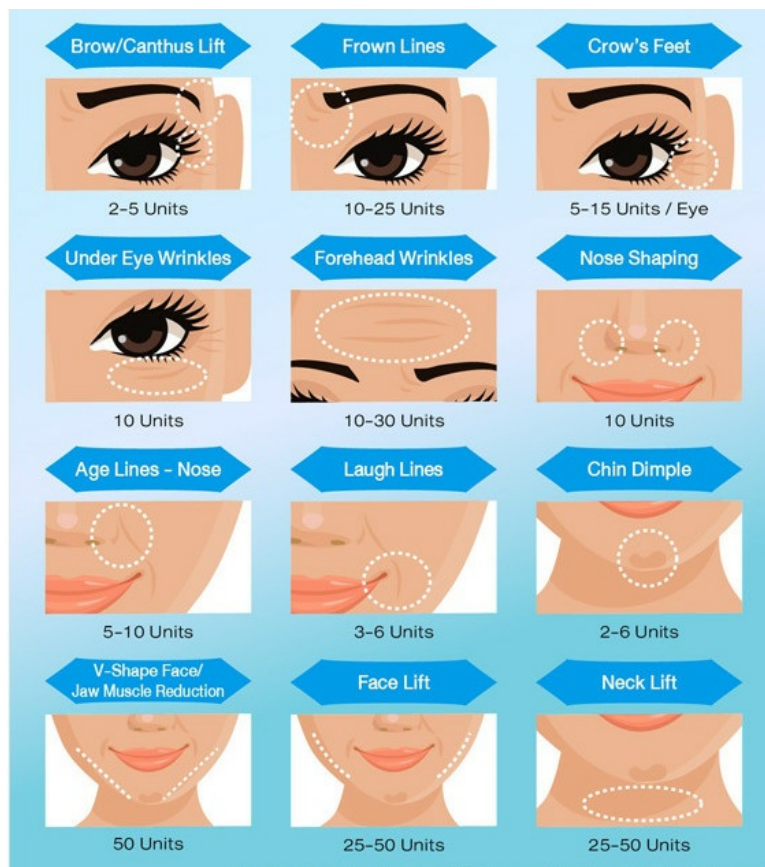

All of these brands have the same active ingredient: botulinum toxin type A. They're all used to treat wrinkles and fine lines but may differ in the formulation used, how many doses you need, and how much the product tends to move from the point of injection. Your cosmetic surgeon will help you pick the best option depending on your body and your goals.

What Does Botox Do?

Botox and Botox-like injections are used in a couple of different ways: cosmetically, to reduce the signs of aging, and medically, to treat certain conditions.

Botox is mainly used to treat dynamic wrinkles, which are those that form due to facial movements when you make expressions, such as frowning, smiling, and squinting. It won't help with wrinkles caused by or gravity. It's used most often to reduce the appearance of fine lines and wrinkle on your face, such as:

- Glabellar lines between your eyebrows (also called elevens or frown lines)
- Forehead creases or furrows
- Wrinkles around your eyes, especially crow's feet
- Thick bands in your neck
- Wrinkles at the corners of your mouth (also called marionette lines)
- Nasal/nasalis wrinkles on both sides of your nose (also called bunny lines)
- Nasolabial folds (smile lines or laugh lines) that run from your nose to the corners of your mouth
- Wrinkles and dimples on your chin that create a "cobblestoned" appearance
