Product Description

Aqualyx helps in the treatment of reducing localised adiposity.

Aqualyx is a compound solution from the deoxycholate family that has been physically modified and, by creating a slow release sugar-based system, the biological half-life is reduced which results in minimal side effects.

Whoever presents with "localized adiposity", or accumulations of subcutaneous adipose tissue which are unresponsive to normal metabolic actions (low-calories diet and physical activity), is an ideal candidate for the treatment with ultrasound and Aqualyx.

For example, women can successfully treat unsightly fat pads present in anatomical areas such as hips, "coulette de cheval", of the inner knee and thigh. Instead, males can easily reduce abdominal fat and double chin. Aqualyx is not indicated in obese or significant overweight patients.

What is Aqualyx® used for?

It used for Aqualysis or Aquaplasty treatment to reduce localised, stubborn fat deposits in areas such as the chin, stomach, outer and inner thighs, hips, knees etc.

How quickly will I see results?

A reduction in fat deposits can usually be seen after just one treatment, however between three and eight sessions are required to see the optimal effect. The speed at which results are seen will vary depending on the stability of the cell membranes; younger patients are more likely to results after a longer period. Results may vary from physician to physician and case by age.
